The Leaky Pipeline

Why are so few women coaching at the HP level in

The coaching career path in the HP Sport System is marked by complexity and challenges, especially for women coaches.

FNTRY

Australia?

There are challenges entering the 'pipeline'. Opportunities include: improved talent identification: recruitment strategies and capability based recruitment; strengthening mentoring and networks and; athlete to coach transition

The departure issue

The stories we have heard from current and former coaches indicate that many women exit the Australian HP Sport System at different career stages. This results in a leaking talent pipeline and a profound gender gap in head coaching roles.

Understanding and addressing these challenges is vital to offer tailored support and ensure sustainable growth for women in HP coaching.

Toolkit: Hidden talent pools

To harness these hidden talent pools effectively, we need to be proactive:

- Look beyond current coaches and explore roles in sport that have transferrable skills. [e.g., cross sport from gymnastics to aerial skiing, intrasport sport science to coaching.)
- Directly target individuals outside the coaching system who may lack awareness of how to engage (this includes current or former athletes).
- Shift the focus from solely nurturing the next generation of coaches to identifying those who have left coaching but might consider returning. This includes women with older children who are now more amenable to flexible schedules.
- Actively seek out alternative income sources for part time or volunteer coaches to sustain their engagement.

How do we tap into the hidden talent pools?

LaVoi's model<sup>2</sup> can be applied at every inflection point throughout the career journey.

Entice: Encourage more women to enter HP coaching through various strategies.

Enter: Support newcomers with role orientation and skill development.

Engage: Foster mentorship, sponsorship, and inclusive environments while addressing life strategies like pregnancy and parental Exit: Develop strategies to support coaches leaving their roles voluntarily or involuntarily.

ENGAGE

ENTER

Energise: Implement purposeful strategies for renewal, resilience, and personal growth.
